

HEARST FOR PRESIDENT.

The Laurensville Herald Launches a Boom in South Carolina on the New York Editor.

While some politicians are exploiting the name of this or that man as a suitable or logical Democratic candidate for the Presidency, and emphasizing the political expediency of nominating him at the next National Democratic Convention, from all over the country, and especially in this State, comes the news that Representative Hearst is practically without competitor in the race for the highest national honors. But the most encouraging sign that the Democratic masses are still true to the first principles of true Jeffersonian Democracy is the fact that the great body of the common people naturally turn toward William R. Hearst, the untiring expounder of old-time Jeffersonian doctrine. His democracy is unchallenged, and his soundness on all party questions and on all the issues that make for the betterment of the people is acknowledged even by his political enemies; and in every position in which he has been placed his political course in the past has been and is now one of intense devotion and loyalty to the masses at large. And it was in recognition of this devotion and loyalty, in working for the interest of all the people that the great labor vote in the city of New York elected him to Congress by an overwhelming majority over his Republican competitor. Although possessed of much wealth Mr. Hearst, like Thomas Jefferson, has used not only his talents and tireless industry in the cause of the people, but has expended his wealth, not in the promotion of trusts and commercial grinding of the citizens of this great country, but rather has he spent it freely, lavishly in the protection of the people against the encroachment of trusts and every species of oppression that preyed upon the substantial prosperity and happiness of the people. Even now Mr. Hearst is fighting the battle of our people against criminal trusts, and the smashing of them will be the key note of his campaign, should he be the party's nominee. The patriot who, in this day and time, has the courage and manhood to defy the rich and powerful in his efforts to give to the people "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people," deserves to be supported and sustained with that same determination and perseverance, on the part of the common people, as that which nerved him to throw himself in the breach for the great and just cause of his people, let the cost be what it may. Mr. Hearst has been endorsed by State Legislatures, and while the chosen champion in the North among sterling Democrats, he is at the same time popular in the South. His unalloyed patriotism and love of the people are not sectional. In laboring for the well-fare and prosperity of the people at large, his big heart knows no north, no south, no east, no west. He is of Southern extraction, and has been acclaimed wherever he has gone in the Southern states.

Mr. Hearst, while championing the interests and rights of the community of this country with a fervor not surpassed since the days of Jefferson and Jackson, would be a safe executive for all sections of our great country. The legitimate channels of trade could have no fear of him as one who would be inimical to the extensive business interests of the country. From what we can learn, the chances are all in favor of Mr. Hearst as the strongest candidate that could be nominated. There is not the least doubt about his being able to carry New York State and the so-called necessary

States bordering on New York, besides the certainty of his capturing California and several of the absolutely necessary Western States and it is even considered by wise politicians, that Mr. Hearst's chances would be most excellent, even though New York should be carried by the Republican candidate, which would not be at all likely. But however that might be, there is no candidate whose loyalty to true Democratic principles appeals more strongly to Southern democrats than does that of William Randolph Hearst, and from what we can learn of Mr. Hearst's strength in the South, there seems to be no question that he will sweep this section overwhelmingly. His great papers have been fighting the battles of the South; every important problem affecting the people's prosperity has been dealt with ably, boldly, and fairly. His journalistic ability has long since won for him a national reputation, but just now it is his individual worth that is being recognized and appreciated in the substantial form of practical politics.

The agitation by the friends of Mr. Hearst is not of recent development in the South, as he has for several months been the leading and favorite candidate for the Presidency, and this choice springs from the very heart of the masses in recognition of his splendid services in the cause of Democracy and his fight against every Republican engine of oppression. And the people may expect an able champion in their behalf in the nomination of Mr. Hearst—one in whom there is no let up, no surrender, until the battle for the people is won.
